ANCHORAGE, Alaska-- The Anchorage Parks and Recreation Department is taking comments from park users through their Park Report Cards program.

The city is taking a close look at every neighborhood park to make improvements -- large and small -- where they're needed.

About 80 neighborhood parks throughout the city will receive a report card based on users' input.

On Saturday, Anchorage Parks and Recreation was at Fairbanks Park in Fairview taking a look and talking with park users.

"It looks really good," said Recreation Supervisor Dave Brossard. "A lot of changes have taken place in this park, but there's always room for improvement. Some of them are minor things, some could be additions and improvements to what's in place at this time."

Dates and times for grading events like the one at Fairbanks Park Saturday are available at the municipal's park website.
