

Group creates new way for people to help improve parks

Saturday, December 03, 2005 - by Chris Joy

Tom Anderson/KTUU-TV

Anchorage, Alaska - Parks are a big part of life in Alaska and a new group has an innovative way you can help improve a park of your choice.

The Anchorage Parks Foundation, a non-profit group started just 11 months ago, has introduced a new catalog. It gives donors the chance to shop for specific items to help refurbish or improve area parks. The catalog features park essentials such as picnic tables and trash cans, along with traditional donor items like t-shirts and Nalgene bottles.

“We get a fair amount of calls from people who are interested in purchasing a bench or planting a tree in a park, so we created the catalog as a donor service so that people could have an easy way to contribute,” said Beth Nordlund, the developmental director for the Anchorage Parks Foundation.

Tom Anderson/KTUU-TV

Related Articles

There aren't any recent news articles related to this story.